Will This Season's Bachelorette Finally Make It To The Alter?
If So, She Might Want To Partake In The Latest
Pre-Wedding Trend:
THE SPA BACHELORETTE PARTY

New York, NY January 13, 2003 - As ABC's "The Bachelorette," Trista Rehn, narrows down her choice of suitors week by week, her friends might want to think about planning a memorable bachelorette party before she winds up at the alter. Gone are the days of strippers, Chippendale dancers and hard partying girls trying to keep up with the coveted male bachelor party. Today's women are taking it to the spa, where they can be scrubbed, massaged, primped and pampered all in time to look their very best for the big day.

Oasis On Park, Manhattan's Premier Day Spa, is taking the traditional bachelorette party and turning it into a day filled with manicures, massages and make-overs. According to Lisa West, Director of Special Events at Oasis, "Bachelorette party groups may tailor their spa experience to their own specific needs. They give us a time frame and we help them make the most out of their day with choices of facials, scrubs, manicures and pedicures, hair, make-up and massages." Oasis even has a "studio" which may be utilized for a catered lunch, games and even a champagne toast to the bride-to-be.

This latest trend in bachelorette parties has been popular in Los Angeles for years and has just begun to pick-up momentum in NYC. With Oasis' 10,000 square feet it can certainly accommodate a party of any size. And with gift bags to take home, ladies leave with wonderful memories and great spa products to boot.
